

Saving Languages

Language endangerment has been the focus of much attention over the past few decades, and as a result a wide range of people are now working to revitalize and maintain local languages. This book serves as a general reference guide to language revitalization, written not only for linguists and anthropologists, but also for language activists and community members who believe they should ensure the future use of their languages, despite their predicted loss. Drawing extensively on case studies, it sets out the necessary background and highlights central issues such as literacy, policy decisions, and allocation of resources. Its primary goal is to provide the essential tools for a successful language revitalization program, such as setting and achieving realistic goals, and anticipating and resolving common obstacles. Clearly written and informative, Saving Languages will be an invaluable resource for all those interested in the fate of small language communities around the globe.

LENORE A. GRENABLE is Professor of Russian and Linguistics at Dartmouth College, Hanover. Her research has focused on issues of language contact, language endangerment, and discourse analysis, and she has carried out fieldwork on the Tungusic languages of Siberia, extending more recently to other languages spoken in the North. She has previously published, with Lindsay Whaley, Endangered Languages (Cambridge University Press, 1998).

LINDSAY J. WHALEY is Associate Professor of Classics and Linguistics at Dartmouth College, Hanover, where he also serves as Chair of Linguistics and Cognitive Science. For the past ten years he has researched Tungusic languages in northern China and Siberia. His research interests include typology, Bantu and Tungusic linguistics, syntactic theory, language endangerment, and language revitalization. He has previously published with Lenore A. Grenoble, Endangered Languages (Cambridge University Press, 1998).
