Crownshaw, 2016-04-30 This bold intervention into the debate over the memory and post memory of the Holocaust both scrutinizes recent academic theories of post Holocaust trauma and provides a new reading of literary and architectural memory texts related to the Holocaust

Second-Generation Memory and Contemporary Children's Literature Anastasia Ulanowicz, 2013-09-02 Winner of the Children's Literature Association Book Award This book visits a range of textual forms including diary novel and picturebook to explore the relationship between second generation memory and contemporary children's literature Ulanowicz argues that second generation memory informed by intimate family relationships textual mediation and technology is characterized by vicarious rather than direct experience of the past As such children's literature is particularly well suited to the representation of second generation memory insofar as children's fiction is particularly invested in the transmission and reproduction of cultural memory and its form promotes the formation of various complex intergenerational relationships Further children's books that depict second generation memory have the potential to challenge conventional Western notions of selfhood and ethics This study shows how novels such as Lois Lowry's The Giver 1993 and Judy Blume's Starring Sally J Freedman as Herself 1977 both of which feature protagonists who adapt their elders memories into their own mnemonic repertoires implicitly reject Cartesian notions of the unified subject in favor of a view of identity as always already social relational and dynamic in character This book not only questions how and why second generation memory is represented in books for young people but whether such representations of memory might be considered radical or conservative Together these analyses address a topic that has not been explored fully within the fields of children's literature trauma and memory studies and Holocaust studies

Handbook of Memory Disorders Alan D. Baddeley, Barbara A. Wilson, Fraser N. Watts, 1995 Aimed at clinical psychologists neuropsychologists speech and occupational therapists this text includes varieties of memory disorders and assessment and management of memory disorders

Dressays Rosie Findlay, 2026-04-16 Dressays is an anthology of thought provoking essays exploring how clothing can reveal the complex deeply felt bonds we have with ourselves our communities and the worlds through which we move These deeply personal narratives demonstrate how whether saturated with emotion or charged with political significance dress both bears and shapes meaning Collectively they show how dress is as inextricable from shared cultures and histories as we are from the garments we wear The contributions in this anthology articulate what is often felt but not seen when it comes to dress how it ties us to other people how it hides us even as it makes us visible and how it helps us navigate and participate in our communities They offer insight into a wide spectrum of human experiences including how clothes relate to experiences of disability chronic illness religious faith self alienation and grief of caring for a loved one of being racialised of coming to terms with one's sexuality and of custodianship of the natural world By revealing how garments and accessories form the threshold of our experience of the world these essays show just how entangled with both they are

Young societies with long memories. A study into "remembering" in Israel/Palestine and South Africa Sam Hines, 2021-01-20 Essay from the year 2019 in the subject World History General and Comparison grade 69 Oxford University language English abstract This essay will investigate whether a memory can predate a nation's formation and whether they can in fact be long by conducting a study from two angles the first exploring persisting memories from before 1948 and the second examining the memories of that year and beyond By focusing mainly on Israeli and Palestinian society but also touching on South African it will conclude that young societies can have long memories these communities all drew upon their past experiences or what they believed to be their past experiences whether they be during times of colonial occupation or other traumatic events across the globe to create a prosthetic collective memory to augment a quasi ubiquitous nationalistic sentiment and enhance zealous beliefs Ultimately as Megill notes in moments of crisis people often hark back to the past with greater intensity valorising memory and weaving embellished narratives into the political and cultural discourse Societies are trapped in their own past characterised by their collective ideologies understanding and memories Although a society may be young in terms of its conception date citizens inherit pre state narratives that heavily influence and shape contemporary actions and ideas These long memories tend to be collective a narrative in which individual memories agglomerate in an intersubjective process being exchanged appropriated and forgotten During this process the frontiers between what one has actually experienced and what one believes they have experienced through hearing or reading for example often become blurred leading to the creation of a prosthetic memory

Jordan, 2006 Structures of Memory turns to the landscape of contemporary Berlin particularly places marked by the presence of the Nazi regime in order to understand how some places of great cruelty or great heroism are forgotten by all but eyewitnesses while others become the site of public ceremonies museums or commemorative monuments
