Joobbani, 2012-12-06 Routing of VLSI chips is an important time consuming and difficult problem The difficulty of the problem is attributed to the large number of often conflicting factors that affect the routing quality Traditional techniques have approached routing by ignoring some of these factors and imposing unnecessary constraints in order to make routing tractable In addition to the imposition of these restrictions which simplify the problems to a degree but at the same time reduce the routing quality traditional approaches use brute force They often transform the problem into mathematical or graph problems and completely ignore the specific knowledge about the routing task that can greatly help the solution This thesis overcomes some of the above problems and presents a system that performs routing close to what human designers do In other words it heavily capitalizes on the knowledge of human expertise in this area it does not impose unnecessary constraints it considers all the different factors that affect the routing quality and most importantly it allows constant user interaction throughout the routing process To achieve the above this thesis presents background about some representative techniques for routing and summarizes their characteristics It then studies in detail the different factors such as minimum area number of vias wire length etc that affect the routing quality and the different criteria such as vertical horizontal constraint graph merging minimal rectilinear Steiner tree etc that can be used to optimize these factors Psychoanalytic Process Research Strategies Hartvig Dahl, Horst Kächele, Helmut Thomä, 2012-12-06 Hartvig Dahl This is a book about the future that we hope will arouse the curiosity of clinicians and point a direction for researchers It marks the surprisingly rapid evolution of psychodynamic psychotherapy research from an applied toward a basic science and as its title implies describes strategies to follow rather than results to live by It was not always thus A quarter of a century ago the editors of two volumes of psychotherapy research reports summarized the state of the field then Although there has been a great accumulation of clinical observations and experimental findings the field has made relatively little progress There has been little creative building on the work of others Parloff and Rubinstein 1962 Psychological research generally has tended to be insufficiently additive Research people often find it hard to keep informed of related work done on the same site and else where and therefore do not build upon each other's foundation Luborsky and Strupp 1962 Introductory Readings in Expert
