

REQUIEM

It was a matter of business and investments—but it wouldn't stay that way, for a man who'd dreamed, and focused those dreams.

By Robert A. Heinlein

Illustrated by M. Sapp

On a high hill in Kansas there is a grave. Inscribed on the marker are three words:

*"Under the stars and stripes sleep
The one who died for his
God and I love and gladly die
That I lay not down with a will!"*

*"This is the grave you speak for me—
Show to my father he longed to do.
Show to the nation, born from the sky,
That he never leaves from the sky."*

These lines appear another place—gravelled on a shipping tray now from a compressed-air container, and placed to the ground with a ball.

It was not much of a sale, as sales go. The trading races didn't promise much excitement, even though several entries claimed the blood of the immortal Dan Patch. The tests and concession booths barely covered the circus grounds, and the postmen seemed discouraged.

D. D. Harrison's chauffeur could not see any reason for stopping. They were due in Kansas City for a directors' meeting; that is to say, Harrison was. The chauffeur had private reasons for promptness, reasons involving downtown society on Eighteenth Street. But the bus not only stopped; he hung around. He didn't seem much interested in the racetrack or side-shows, though.

Turning and a racetrack arch made the entrance to a large inclosure beyond the racetrack. Red and gold letters announced:

This way to the
MOON ROCKETS 1 1 1
See it in actual flight!
Public Demonstration Flights
TWICE DAILY

This is the ACTUAL TYPE used by the
First Men to Reach the MOON!!!
TICKETS on sale in 311-42

A boy, nine or ten years old, hung around the entrance and stared at the posters.

"Want to see the ship, son?"

The kid's eyes shined. "Yes, mister, I sure would."

"So would I. Come on."

Harrison paid out fifty cents for two pink tickets which provided him and the boy to enter the inclosure and examine the rocketship. The kid ran on ahead with the single-minded preoccupation of boyhood. Harrison looked over the smiling curved lines of the oval body. He noted with a professional eye that she was a single-jet type with fractional controls around her midriff. He spotted through his glasses at the nose painted in gold on the carnival red of the body. Carefree. He paid another quarter to enter the control cabin.

When his eyes had adjusted to the gloom caused by the strong ray filters of the ports, he let them rest longly on the keys of the console and the semi-circle of dial slaves. Each beloved gal-get was in its proper place. He knew them—greenie in his heart.

While he looked over the instrument board, with the warm liquid of cement seeping through his body, the pilot entered and touched his arm.

"Sorry, sir. We've got to rust here for the night."

"Oh?" Harrison curved, then looked at the speaker. Handsome devil, with a good skull and strong, doubtless-weakless eyes and a self-indulgent mouth, but a firm chin. "Oh, excuse me, captain."

"Quite all right."

"Oh, I see, captain . . . it's all right."

"Mister."

"Captain McHenry, could you take a passenger this trip?" The old man leaned eagerly toward him.

"Why, yes, if you wish. Come along with me." He ushered Harrison into a shed marked "Office" which stood near the gate. "Passenger for a check-out, doc."

Harrison permitted the warden to run a stethoscope over his thin chest and to wrap a rubber bandage around his arm. Presently the doctor unstrapped
