Philosophy of Natural Therapeutics Henry Lindlahr,1921 Infrared Thermography Dr. Eddie Weller and Dr. Michael Brent Lea,MichaelLea,2023-01-18 The year 1924 was a game changer For the first time the profession as a whole

had a way of gauging the nervous system via the NCM neurocalometer This scientific leap revealed if aberrant spinal temperatures were present and more importantly when they were not Today we now understand that a temperature asymmetry as detected by thermography reflects function of the sympathetic nervous system When the chiropractor implements thermography not only are they able to obtain important neurological data but also equips the entire chiropractic profession with an objective analysis of when to adjust and when not to adjust The philosophical and artistic constructs can be debated based on one's personal understanding However science when applied objectively cannot be argued With what we currently know and understand about the nervous system when a spinal compromise is present the nervous system will always be affected Thermography and its application thereof provide the chiropractor an objective neurological gauge Moreover it provides a unique way to not only keep the profession separate and distinct but to also unite the profession as a whole
