Mind, Language and Subjectivity Nicholas Georgalis, 2014-11-20 In this monograph Nicholas Georgalis further develops his important work on minimal content recasting and providing novel solutions to several of the fundamental problems faced by philosophers of language His theory defends and explicates the importance of thought tokens and minimal content and their many to one relation to linguistic meaning challenging both externalist accounts of thought and the solutions to philosophical problems of language they inspire The concepts of idiolect use and statement made are critically discussed and a classification of kinds of utterances is developed to facilitate the latter This is an important text for those interested in current theories and debates on philosophy of mind philosophy of language and their points of intersection

Philosophy of the Unconscious Eduard von Hartmann, 2001

Rethinking Language, Mind, and Meaning Scott Soames, 2015-05-26 In this book Scott Soames argues that the revolution in the study of language and mind that has taken place since the late nineteenth century must be rethought The central insight in the reigning tradition is that propositions are representational To know the meaning of a sentence or the content of a belief requires knowing which things it represents as being which ways and therefore knowing what the world must be like if it is to conform to how the sentence or belief represents it These are truth conditions of the sentence or belief But meanings and representational contents are not truth conditions and there is more to propositions than representational content In addition to imposing conditions the world must satisfy if it is to be true a proposition may also impose conditions on minds that entertain it The study of mind and language cannot advance further without a conception of propositions that allows them to have contents of both of these sorts Soames provides it He does so by arguing that propositions are repeatable purely representational cognitive acts or operations that represent the world as being a certain way while requiring minds that perform them to satisfy certain cognitive conditions Because they have these two types of content one facing the world and one facing the mind pairs of propositions can be representationally identical but cognitively distinct Using this breakthrough Soames offers new solutions to several of the most perplexing problems in the philosophy of language and mind
