I. INTRODUCTION

The interest in scientific communication, publications and their impact has been increasing in recent decades, not only for researchers, for whom there are specific metrics, but for the research and innovation systems of several countries. In this paper we propose an analysis of trends in academic production on international logistics.

Bibliometric studies are classified depending on the sources and analyzes that are performed. In the first case, they can be based on: bibliographies; Indexing services and abstracts (usually citation indexes are used); references or citations (citation analysis); And in directories or collective catalogs of journal titles [1]. In the second case, there are three subcategories: "descriptive bibliometry, which deals with purely quantitative aspects, such as geographic distribution, documentary, thematic and its productivity; (1) and the monitoring and diagnosis ([3], [4]). In addition, the results of this study are presented below.

This paper aims to establish the current trends of research in international logistics, based on descriptive bibliometric analysis and diagnosis.

II. METHODOLOGY

A descriptive, explanatory and diagnostic bibliometric analysis was carried out to obtain quantitative information allowing a comparative analysis of the production. The evaluation of the research was first carried out in a scientific field from 1956 to 2016, carrying out monitoring and diagnostics in the Scopus database, using the following search criteria "international logistics" or "international logistics" or "Logistique internationale" or "Logistica internazionale", including in this way works in at least 5 languages (French, Portuguese, Spanish, English and Italian).

After an initial bibliometric review, a second comparative analysis was carried out, but with data from 2013 to 2016, the following route:
