

The impact of relativity

The physicist Albert Einstein changed the notions of space, time and gravity that were considered well established since Newton's and Galileo's times with his theory of relativity (special and general), in the first decades of the last century. This would dramatically alter our perception of the origin, evolution and structure of the universe.

Unimagined world

In 1905 Albert Einstein published his theory of relativity that space and time are not absolute. He stated that they "exist" in a single continuum of spacetime. The theory "can be described like an elastic band, it stretches itself". In 1915, Einstein published gravity as his theory (general relativity) and concluded that gravity is a consequence of the space-time bending. According to the physicist, the trajectory of light is modified when approaching heavenly bodies that warp space around them.

Space-time
In the context of the theory, the Newtonian concept of time and space is replaced by the idea of spacetime, the idea of space and time being inseparable. There is no time that exists in isolation from space.

"Big Bang"

Einstein's ideas played a role and were essential to think about the "Big Bang" as the origin of the universe and the evolution of space-time (initially static universe).

Mass warps
When approaching the Sun and the Earth, the curvature of the space-time is such a type of warping and space-time is not flat during the day.

Equivalence

In 1907, Einstein realized that physics must be the same whether it is in a flat space or in a curved space. This led him to the theory of general relativity, which states that gravity is a consequence of the curvature of space-time.

Curvature

The trajectory of the straight line of an object is modified by the Sun.

Light rays
The propagation of light is affected by gravity. Light rays are deflected by the curvature of space-time. This is why light rays from distant stars appear to be bent when they pass near the Sun.

Observation

The generalization of the theory of relativity was a major step in the development of modern physics.

A matter of position

Starting one day, stars' light reaches the Earth directly because of their location. The presence of a massive body creates a curvature in the spacetime fabric. The comparison could be made and proven right in the 1919 experiment.

Experiment

The light of the stars is deflected by the Sun, but the light rays are not deflected by the Earth.

1919 experiment

In 1919, the British astronomer Arthur Eddington led an expedition to observe the total solar eclipse of May 29, 1919. The expedition measured the deflection of starlight by the Sun during the eclipse, which confirmed Einstein's theory of general relativity.

Observation of the bending of light

The observation of the bending of light during the 1919 experiment was a major confirmation of Einstein's theory of general relativity. It showed that gravity warps space-time, and light rays are deflected by this curvature.
