

PRODUCING WOOD UNITS

Producing wood units is a complex process that involves several key steps, from raw material selection to final product distribution. The process begins with the selection of high-quality timber, which is then processed into various wood products. This includes the production of lumber, plywood, and other wood-based materials. The final products are then distributed to various markets, including construction, furniture, and other wood-using industries. The process is highly dependent on the availability of raw materials and the efficiency of the production process.
