- 1 Qualitative. They were qualitative because all observations were recorded using only words.
- 2 Carl thought that he should also do a quantitative analysis; that is, record the observations using numbers to measure how much the grass actually grows under different situations.
- 3 a Controls.
- b Every experiment needs a control against which results can be compared.
- 4 Types of grass, amount of grass.
- 5 The amount of water was kept the same.
- 6 The amount of sunlight.
- 7 The amount of water.
- 8 The soil would have had some water in it on Day 1 and would take a few days to dry out.
- 9 Measurements to be taken at the same time of day. Same ruler to be used and measured from the same place. Others as appropriate.
- 10 Repeating measurements is a good way to improve accuracy. Once a collection of different measurements is taken, an average can be obtained.
