ABSTRACT

This paper describes changes that have occurred in the silviculture of southern bottomland hardwood forests over the past 25 years, particularly in terms of modifications to existing silvicultural practices, abandonment of unsuitable practices, and development of new practices. Changes in the focus and objectives of hardwood silviculture and the emergence of new concerns to hardwood silviculturists are also discussed. Speculations on the future character of hardwood silviculture in southern bottomlands, as well as recommendations for future silvicultural research, are presented.

INTRODUCTION

Silviculture of southern bottomland hardwood forests has evolved considerably over the past 25 years. Many existing silvicultural practices have been modified to be more successful and to be more ecologically sound. Some silvicultural practices common 25 years ago have simply been abandoned. New silvicultural practices have been developed through research and have been implemented on the ground. In many instances, the focus and objectives of southern bottomland hardwood silviculture have changed. Many new and challenging issues have affected the way silviculturists manage southern bottomland hardwood forests. All of these changes and developments have altered the character of hardwood silviculture over the past 25 years and will continue to shape the character of hardwood silviculture for many years to come.

This paper will (1) describe changes in the silviculture of southern bottomland hardwood forests that have occurred over the past 25 years, (2) speculate on the future character of hardwood silviculture in southern bottomland forests as it will develop over the next 25 years, and (3) present recommendations for future research in the silviculture of southern bottomland hardwood forests.

OVERVIEW OF SOUTHERN BOTTOMLAND HARDWOOD FORESTS

To adequately understand and appreciate the changes in silviculture of southern bottomland hardwood forests that have occurred over the past 25 years, it is necessary to be familiar with the southern bottomland hardwood resource itself—the extent of the resource, the physiography of the sites, and the major cover types that are found in these diverse forests.

Extent of the Resource

Currently, there are about 30 million acres of bottomland hardwood forests in the South (Hodges, 1994). The loss of these valuable forests, primarily as a result of conversion to agriculture and other uses, has slowed in the
