

COMPOSITION – TECHNIQUE

Structure: Your composition must consist of three, clearly distinguishable parts: introduction, main part ("body") and final paragraph ("conclusion") and a title. Regardless of whether you write an argumentative essay (pro AND con) or a comment (pro OR con), your main part needs at least two sound arguments.

Title: You can create interesting titles with the help of alliterations, puns and variations of/allusions to well-known proverbs/sayings and titles of famous books, songs or films. Make sure that your title fits your composition. At the end of your composition the meaning of a deliberately strange/confusing title must be clear.

Introduction: Typical elements of good introductions are references to current events, quotes of famous people, (alarming) statistics and personal experiences. The introduction should include a thesis statement introducing either your opinion concerning this topic (comment) or showing the ambiguity of the topic (argumentative essay). A thesis statement should be neither obvious nor vague. A thesis must be controversial and arguable; it should be possible for someone to come up with a reasonable argument contradicting your own so don't use absolutes "As everybody knows". Avoid commonplaces such as "Yesterday I read in the newspaper".

Main part: The main part of a standard composition consists of at least 2 separate paragraphs. Arrange your arguments in a certain order, e.g. from general to specific. Use suitable connectors/phrases to create a coherent text.

Paragraphs/Arguments: Each individual paragraph should be focused on a single idea that supports your thesis. The first sentence, the so-called topic sentence, presents a statement, claim (Behauptung) or idea. The following "supporting" sentences must refer to and illustrate the topic sentence with the help of concrete examples. The ideas in a body paragraph should come in a logical sequence that explains, complicates, or develops the idea put forth in the paragraph's topic sentence. Transitional words ("furthermore," "in contrast," "for example," "as a result") help your reader understand the way that you are developing your main idea. Each paragraph should consist of at least three sentences. Do not leave blank lines between paragraphs. Do not summarize at the end of the paragraph. In handwritten compositions indent the first line of each paragraph (except the first one) by circa 1.5 cm in order to visualize the beginning of a new paragraph.

Conclusion: Your final paragraph should not just be a mere repetition of what you have already said/written. Do not present new/additional arguments and/or examples in your conclusion. Ending your paper by showing that your argument can be applied to a related topic reiterates the relevance of your ideas. You could also use the conclusion to show the limits of your argumentation or possible problems.
