The New Regionalism in Trade Policy Jaime Melo de, Arvind Panagariya, 1992-01-01 Regionalism is once again being viewed as a solution to the major international economic problems of our times Slow progress of the negotiations at the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade GATT has led some economists to conclude that a division of the world into three trading blocs Europe the Americas and East Asia is the fastest road to multilateral free trade They argue that negotiations for free trade are far more likely to succeed when conducted among three parties rather than among 154 For many countries the proliferation of nontariff barriers in the industrial world has made regional integration an attractive policy option However the experience with South South integration has been discouraging and some economists claim that any temptation to promote such schemes in the future should be resisted As for North North integration it has been widely successful in Europe Intraregional trade expanded greatly but not at the expense of trade with non partners which also grew rapidly And European integration has greatly diminished if not eliminated the possibility of future internal conflicts Looking to the future North South integration holds much promise for developing countries Regional arrangements of this type can solidify past reforms guarantee future access to a large market and stimulate growth via increased direct foreign investment more intense competition and faster technological diffusion

New Dimensions in Regional Integration Jaime De Melo, Arvind Panagariya, 1995 Interest in regional integration has recently revived in both developed and developing countries The US has responded to the lack of progress in the Uruguay Round of the GATT by pursuing bilateral trade negotiations while developing countries have been prompted to re evaluate the potential benefits of regional integration The tendency for the world trading system to divide into three blocs the European Community the Americas and East Asia is providing their members with guaranteed access to large markets however poor non member countries will suffer from the loss of access and the risk of trade wars is increased In this book leading international experts assess the renewed attractiveness of regional integration to individual countries the types of integration that are suitable to various circumstances the conditions necessary to their success and the relationship of regionalism to multilateral free trade
