

Teacher Certification

1

What are the main requirements for teacher certification?

Each state has its own set of rules and requirements but most require:

- A bachelor degree from a regionally accredited school
- A passing score on a state teacher exam
- Completion of an "approved teacher training program." [i]

Do all teachers need to be certified?

2

In some states, substitute teachers and teacher aides do not need to be certified. Most private school teachers are not required to hold a teaching license. However, all full-time teachers in public schools need to earn a teaching license from the state where you will be teaching. [ii]

3

What is an approved teacher training program?

- An educational program that has been approved by the state in which it is based. It might also be called an approved educator preparation program, or ATPP.
- Involve a supervised period of teaching experience, usually known as a "practicum" or "student teaching."

What kinds of teaching licenses are there?

4

-Early childhood education or secondary education, technical education, fine arts education, special education, school psychologist, school administrator, etc. All these different types of degrees involve different sets of certification requirements.

5

What is an initial or provisional teacher certification?

This certification is a temporary license granted to many new teachers. It entitles a teacher to work in a state school system, for a limited amount of time, even if they haven't completed an ATPP, or passed the state's standardized exams. They can become professionally certified later, once the necessary criteria have been met.

What is a professional or standard teacher certification?

6

This certification is earned after a teacher completes several years of successful employment under an initial or provisional license. Before earning professional certification, teachers must complete any outstanding requirements (e.g. passing scores on standardized tests).
