

Information for Parents

In Literacy lessons teachers will be seeking to encourage their pupils to:

- Read confidently and with understanding;
- Understand phonics and spelling patterns;
- Use neat handwriting with speed and accuracy;
- Expand their vocabulary;
- Appreciate a range of styles in fiction and poetry;
- Understand how stories are structured by the writers' use of settings, characters and plots;
- Read and use non-fiction materials;
- Develop their own writing using techniques of planning, drafting and editing;
- Enjoy reading books;
- Use imagination and inventiveness in their own writing.

Throughout the primary years the children will address their literacy work at three levels: word level, sentence level and text level.

Word level work includes word recognition, phonics, spelling, vocabulary and handwriting.

Sentence level work covers grammatical awareness, sentence construction and punctuation.

Text level work covers comprehension of reading and the composition of writing. It includes working with fiction, non-fiction and poetry.

Many schools operate a "Literacy Hour" where they address all the aspects of literacy directly, but they will also seek to cover some aspects through other subjects throughout the school day.

In the Literacy Now series we provide practice materials for word level, sentence level and text level work, matched appropriately to children's ages. The books are designed to be used by parents working with their children to provide extra practice, whether out of a need to improve particular aspects of the children's progress or simply for the fun of working on English at home.

Literacy Now for ages 10–11

Excellent practice for literacy

You may prefer to use this book as a textbook, rather than as a book to write in. If so, you will need to use an exercise book for your answers.

Try to work out the type of answer that is required for each question. Some questions just need single words for their answers; others need whole sentences. We sometimes provide two or more lines to write answers on, to give you clues as to how much you ought to write.

If you need help from an adult it is all right to ask for it. Sometimes you can learn a lot more just by having a small amount of help. It is always a good idea to have your work checked by an adult when you have finished it. If you have made mistakes you can learn from them.
