Abstract: This systematic review aims to determine the extent to which published research articles show the perspective of health professionals in neonatal intensive care units (NICU), as facilitators of family empowerment. Studies conducted between 2013 and 2020 were retrieved from five databases (PubMed, Cochrane, CINAHL, Scopus, and Google Scholar). The search was carried out from January to October 2020. A total of 40 articles were used, of which 13 studies (quantitative and qualitative) were included in this systematic review. Its methodological quality was assessed using the mixed methods assessment tool (MMAT). In these, the opinions and perspectives of professionals on the permanence and participation of parents were valued. In addition, the training, experiences, and educational needs of nursing within the NICU were determined. The crucial role of health professionals in the humanization of care and its effect on the neonate-family binomial was estimated. However, conceptual changes are needed within the neonatal intensive care units. To implement humanization in daily care, family participation should be encouraged in them. For this, it is necessary to modify hospital health policies to allow changes in the infrastructure that facilitate open doors 24 h a day in special services.

1. Introduction

The role of nursing in the care of newborns (NB) in neonatal intensive care units (NICUs) has evolved over time. This environment has a negative impact on the growth of newborns. Therefore, it is of vital importance to attenuate the stimuli, in order to favour adequate neurological development in the newborn. The newborn individualized developmental care and assessment program (NIDCAP method) aims to individualize care, observing and assessing in a comprehensive way the developmental state, and the ability to cope with the stress of the NB before, during, and after each procedure.

Currently, we are reaching a more humanized assistance and integrating the family as a fundamental part in the care of the newborn and, in turn, including them as main caregivers from birth [1–3]. Previously, the administration of inpatient care involved the separation of the newborn and the family.

Even the scarce presence of parents during the estimated time of visits was perceived by health professionals as a possible risk factor for the health of the sick newborn. A matter
