BENEFITS SUMMARY

- McGraw-Hill enhances customer service by enabling professors to create custom textbooks and have them delivered as Adobe eBooks.
- Adobe Content Server helps McGraw-Hill secure copyright-protected materials by allowing only designated recipients to open Adobe eBooks.
- Customized Adobe eBooks can cost up to 60% less than new textbooks and 30% less than used textbooks.
- Adobe Content Server software gives McGraw-Hill the flexibility to assign or block various activities on eBooks, such as printing, copying, and editing text.
- Adobe eBooks simplify work for professors and students, who can quickly search for topics in entire books and electronically highlight and make notes on text.
- McGraw-Hill can easily convert textbooks in Adobe PDF to Adobe eBooks or send them to printers for reliable printing.
- Only Adobe eBooks can handle the rich graphics, varied text, and complex formulas common in college textbooks.

Every college course is unique. Similar subject matter can be presented in vastly different ways, depending on the professors, the students, and even recent public events. Ideally, a professor could easily assemble a single textbook with readings and assignments that reflect his or her interests and the latest research in a field of study. The reality, however, is that many professors want to use materials in addition to traditional textbooks and spend a lot of time locating and assigning supplemental texts.

With its long history of serving the needs of educators and students, McGraw-Hill set out to address this problem by founding McGraw-Hill/Primis Custom Publishing in 1989. Today, the division is a leader in creating customized college textbooks that are delivered in print or electronically as eBooks in Adobe PDF (Portable Document Format) to professors and students worldwide. Says Julie Keck, senior marketing manager for McGraw-Hill/Primis, "Our custom books solve the age-old complaint of no one textbook ever being enough. Now professors can assemble the exact textbook they want and have it delivered electronically as an Adobe eBook."

Creative approach to learning

The McGraw-Hill/Primis database contains thousands of chapters from books, research papers, and independent studies. Professors can log on to the McGraw-Hill/Primis Web site, www.mhhe.com/primis/online, and choose from materials to create custom textbooks. The Primis system automatically converts the selected materials to Adobe PDF files that are assembled into a textbook containing a table of contents, chapter headings, and numbered pages. Educators even have the option of submitting their own papers in Adobe PDF to include in books.

Electronic proofs of the customized textbooks in Adobe PDF are sent to professors for review. Before they are sent, McGraw-Hill/Primis helps secure the Adobe eBooks with Adobe Content Server software. Using the software, McGraw-Hill can require that Adobe eBooks be opened only on the computers of the people who order the textbooks. The division also selects options in Adobe Content Server that allow viewers to print pages, but not electronically copy or edit text.

"Our goal is to give professors exactly what they want while securing our copyright-protected materials," explains Keck. "Adobe Content Server and Adobe eBooks help make this possible." Once approved by professors, textbooks in Adobe PDF are sold online through university bookstores and made available to students through the McGraw-Hill/Primis Web site.

Smart use of time and resources

Giving professors the freedom to quickly create textbooks in Adobe PDF is only one benefit of the Primis system and the use of Adobe Content Server. Cost savings are another. Textbooks delivered as Adobe eBooks can cost up to 60% less than new paperbound textbooks because expenses for binding, delivery, and managing inventories of paper books are eliminated. Says Keck, "Students
