Region the Council of Nationalities was institutionalized with a number of constitutional mandates of which dispute management and resolution is the prominent one. For the accomplishment of the objective of the study largely secondary data and primary data obtained through unstructured interviews were used. In doing so some cases entertained by the Council of Nationalities is analysed. The Council of Nationalities entertained a number of interethnic conflicts and resolved them accordingly. With regard to this the Council of Nationalities engaged in numerous inter ethnic conflict resolutions submitted to it by the respective contending ethnic groups. The conflicts have been managed and resolved mainly through deploying security force and round the table discussion in collaboration with indigenous conflict resolution institutions. But when we see its achievement in discharging its mandate properly delays to make decision timely late to intervene in conflicts and absence of early warning system to provide information timely are some among the failures of CoN. Therefore though there are some achievements in rendering peace education in some parts of the region the Council of Nationalities has deficiencies in discharging its duties conflict management and resolution aspects of its responsibilities in particular.
