Environmental Regulation and Development: A Cross-Country Empirical Analysis Susmita Dasgupta,1999 April 1995 Environmental protection has not been restricted to wealthy nations Starting at the lowest level of development regulation increases steadily with income per capita The characteristic progression is from natural resource protection through regulation of water pollution to air pollution control Dasgupta Mody Roy and Wheeler develop comparative indices of environmental policy and performance for 31 countries using a quantified analysis of reports prepared for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development In cross country regressions they find a very strong continuous association between their indicators and national income per capita particularly when adjusted for purchasing power parity Their results suggest a characteristic progression in development Poor agrarian economies focus first on natural resource protection With increased urbanization and industrialization countries move from initial regulation of water pollution to air pollution control The authors highlight the importance of institutional development Environmental regulation is more advanced in developing countries with relatively secure property rights effective legal and judicial systems and efficient public administration This paper a product of the Environment Infrastructure and Agriculture Division Policy Research Department is part of a larger effort in the department to study the relationship between environmental regulation and economic development The authors may be contacted at sdasgupta@worldbank.org amody@worldbank.org or dwheeler1@worldbank.org

Environmental Regulation and Development Susmita Dasgupta,Ashoka Mody,Subbendu Roy,David Wheeler,Banco Mundial,1995 Leading Issues in Competition, Regulation, and Development Paul Cook,2004-01-01 The promotion of liberalized and deregulated markets by bilateral and multilateral aid donors and by global institutions such as the WTO has led to significant attention being paid to competition and regulatory reforms in developing economies The process of reform involves the transfer and diffusion of market models derived from practice and theory in developed countries However in developing countries regulation needs to do more than simply promote competitiveness and consumer interests it also needs to ensure that the market nurtures development By rigorously examining the numerous impacts of regulation this book will help to fill a significant gap in the literature on economic and social development The book now available in paperback draws together contributions from leading experts across a range of disciplines including economics law politics and governance public management and business management The authors begin with an extensive overview of the issues of regulation and competition in developing countries and carefully illustrate the important themes and concepts involved Using a variety of country and sector case studies they move on to focus on the problems of applicability and adaptation that are experienced in the process of transferring best practice policy models from developed to developing countries The book presents a clear agenda for further empirical research and is notable for its rigorous exploration of the links between theory and practice Although there is substantial interest in competition and regulation as yet there has been relatively little investigation of these issues in developing economies This book redresses the balance and will be a valuable resource for researchers academics teachers and students interested in development economics and development studies It will also be of great relevance for practitioners and policymakers working in the fields of competition policy and regulatory reform vascular development Before the research contained within this dissertation no transcriptional targets of MEF2 proteins had been discovered in smooth muscle However we found a completely conserved MEF2 site upstream of the HRC transcriptional start site that proved to be necessary for expression of a lacZ transgene in skeletal cardiac and arterial smooth muscle identifying HRC as the first known target gene of MEF2 in smooth muscle We also found that this HRC enhancer was unresponsive to serum response factor SRF making HRC one of only a few smooth muscle genes known not to be a transcriptional target of SRF To understand the transcriptional pathways that MEF2C participates in we initiated an enhancer screen and used evolutionary conservation to identify multiple tissue specific modular enhancers for mef2c In this screen we identified a skeletal muscle enhancer an anterior heart field enhancer three neural crest enhancers and two endothelial enhancers at the mef2c locus One of the enhancer fragments we discovered was a 5.6 Kb fragment that is sufficient to direct expression to both the neural crest and endothelium We have subsequently separated the neural crest and endothelial elements into two independent enhancers and pared down the endothelial element to a mere 44 base pairs which are both necessary and sufficient to direct expression of the lacZ reporter to endothelial cells Within this 44 bp we have found two ETS factor binding sites and an E Box that are necessary for endothelial expression and we continue to search for other regulatory elements
