

Processes in the Rock Cycle

Igneous rocks form from the solidification and cooling of magma or lava. Magma is molten rock that forms beneath the Earth's surface, while lava is magma that has erupted onto the Earth's surface. When magma or lava cools and solidifies, it forms igneous rocks like granite and basalt.

Magma forms when rocks of the Earth's mantle or crust melt due to high temperatures and/or changes in pressure. This can be caused by factors such as the heat from nearby magma chambers, the movement of tectonic plates, or the release of volatiles like water or carbon dioxide.

Metamorphic rocks form when existing rocks are altered by heat, pressure, or chemical processes. This can occur when rocks are buried deep beneath the Earth's surface or come into contact with hot fluids or magma. Metamorphic rocks like marble and slate often have a layered or foliated appearance due to the Sedimentary rocks form from the accumulation and compression of sediment over time. Sediment can include sand, mud, and other materials that are transported by wind, water, or ice. As these materials settle and are buried, they become compacted and cemented together, forming sedimentary rocks like sandstone and limestone.
