Macwhyte Corrosion-Resisting Wire Ropes are made in Stainless Steel, Monel Metal, Galvanized Steel and Plastic Coated Cables, in a variety of sizes and constructions which provide a variation in flexibility and strength to meet service requirements. On most installations, the all-metallic ropes are preferred to the fiber core ropes because the metallic core provides maximum strength, corrosion-resistance, and more economical service.

These ropes are also furnished in complete assemblies and slings with fittings attached.

Recommendations and prices will be given on request.

Typical uses: Following is a partial list of industries using Macwhyte Corrosion-Resisting Wire Ropes:

|                   |                    |
|-------------------|--------------------|
| Aircraft          | Photographic       |
| Beverages         | Printing           |
| Boating           | Pulp and Paper     |
| Cannery           | Rubber             |
| Chemical          | Rug Cleaning       |
| Dye               | Salt               |
| Explosives        | Sewage Disposal    |
| Fertilizer        | Ship               |
| Fire Fighting     | Sugar              |
| Fishing           | Tanning            |
| Food Processing   | Textile            |
| Paint and Varnish | Water Purification |
| Petroleum         | Yachting           |

These industries use these Macwhyte Wire Ropes for many and varied purposes. Among the many uses are: for cranes and hoists, slings, Bag Halyards, conveyors, grading racks, hand rails, standing and running rigging, swing pipe and boat line runs, gate and screen hoists, ventilator, instrument, and regulator controls, etc.

CONSTRUCTIONS

1 x 7 A non-flexible strand of seven wires. In very small diameters, it is sufficiently flexible to operate over pulleys.

1 x 19 A non-flexible strand of nineteen wires. It is generally used for yacht rigging and other drying purposes.

3 x 7 A wire rope made of 3 strands of 7 wires each. It is suitable for operating controls, fishing boats, and other uses, requiring a small yet flexible wire rope.

6 x 7 This is a flexible construction consisting of 6 strands of 7 wires each, around a fiber core.

7 x 7 This is similar to 6 x 7 except for its wire strand core in place of a fiber core. It is comparable to 6 x 7 in flexibility and abrasion resistance. Being an all-metallic rope, it is stronger than 6 x 7 and has the best corrosion resistance.

8 x 19 This rope has 8 strands of 19 wires each, laid around a fiber core. It is more flexible than 6 x 7 or 7 x 7.

7 x 19 This construction is made of 6 strands of 19 wires each, around a wire strand core except in larger sizes when a 7 x 7 Independent Wire Rope Core is used.

It is stronger than 6 x 19, comparable in flexibility, and being all-metallic, it has the best corrosion resistance. It is used for general hoisting and operating purposes.

10 x 19 This wire rope is more flexible than the 7 x 19. The six strands are laid around a 7 x 7 Independent Wire Rope Core, resulting in an all-metallic rope for maximum corrosion resistance. It is used especially on Ship Cranes and Hoists having relatively small sheaves and drums.

12 x 19 This is the most flexible wire rope made but, because of its 212 line wires, it is used where an extremely soft, flexible rope is needed but where the wire rope is not subject to heavy loads and abrasion. Lifter ropes should NOT be used as a hoisting rope.

12 x 7 It really has two ropes in one. The inside six strands of seven wires each, is left lay. The outside 12 strands of seven wires each, is right lay. By combining these two opposite lays in this type of construction, Macwhyte designed a rope that resists kinking, rotating, spooling, or twisting to such an extent that it has become generally recognized as non-rotating or non-spooling rope. To insure the non-spooling feature, it should be used with a safety factor of ten where possible, but not less than six, in its performance for best results.
