- 2. Managing separation anxiety
- 3. Keeping yourself informed and involved

1. Helping your child adjust emotionally
 It's normal for your child to feel nervous about starting preschool. They may have a hard time saying goodbye to you, or they may cry when you leave. This is a sign that they are attached to you, which is a good thing. Try to stay calm and reassuring, and let them know you will be back for them.

Remember that your child is not alone. They will be meeting other children and teachers who will help them adjust. Encourage them to play with other children and to ask for help when they need it.

It's also important to let your child know that you are proud of them. Praise them for their bravery and for their willingness to try new things. Let them know that you will be there for them when they need you.

Remember that the most important thing is to keep your child safe and happy. If you have any concerns, talk to your child's teacher or the preschool's principal.

2. Managing separation anxiety

Separation anxiety is a common experience for young children. It's a natural response to being away from their primary caregiver. To help your child manage separation anxiety, try to keep their routine as consistent as possible. Let them know when you will be leaving and when you will be back.

It's also important to let your child know that you are proud of them. Praise them for their bravery and for their willingness to try new things. Let them know that you will be there for them when they need you.

Preschool is a big milestone for your child and their parents. This is the start of your child's independence. It is a time when your child will learn to separate from you and to play with other children. It is also a time when your child will learn to follow instructions and to share with others.

Preschool is also a time when your child will learn to solve problems and to manage their emotions. They will learn to deal with frustration and to ask for help when they need it. They will also learn to play with other children and to share with them.
