Sentiment and Sociability John Mullan,1988 This study examines the autobiographical writing of Samuel Richardson Laurence Sterne and David Hume who chronicled the peculiarly intimate relationships between the texts they produced and the social lives they lived Each relied on a language of feeling to represent social bonds they considered necessary discovering through their writing a sociability dependent on the communication of passions and sentiments This discovery Mullan argues played a critical role in the development of the eighteenth century fiction now called sentimental

Sentiment and Sociability: the Language of Feeling in Eighteenth Century John Mullan,1988 The rise of the novel in the mid 18th century was also the rise of sentimentalism This study explores the attitudes which led novelists to associate virtuous feeling with disabling suffering It also examines the role of women in fiction and in society during that period
