Renegotiating Local Values: The Case of Fanjingshan Reserve, China

Stuart C. Aitken, Li An, Sarah Wandersee and Yeqin Yang

Introduction

In the early 1990s, Ragnhild Lund (1993) argued for a place- and people-centred perspective in development theory. In doing so, she was one of the first geographers to recognize the devaluation of place in conventional development studies. Lund points out that guidelines for development during the latter half of the twentieth century were heavily focused on economic rather than social, cultural or ecological issues. Drawing from a range of theories from Marxism to liberalism, she notes that few of these perspectives focused on place as a dynamic factor in societal change. Rather, place was characterized as a relatively passive stage for social and political action and interaction. In a broad-ranging critique of 'modernist' Rostowian and Marxist perspectives, Lund argues against both the popular regionalizing systems theories based on Wallerstein and humanist perspectives that advocated endogenous self-reliance. The former tend towards purely economic solutions and the latter suggest a focus on local practices that are hugely valuable and tie in with perspectives that date back to Ernst Schumacher's famous Small is Beautiful (1973), but are also easily conscripted into the service of neoliberal policies that foist way too much responsibility for economic advancement on to the shoulders of people who are least able to bear it. Instead, Lund favours an 'alternative development' that takes account of gender and is influenced by social movements focused on ecology, peace and women (see also Nederveen Pieterse 1998). In so doing, she recognizes:

... that women and men encounter a variety of external policies and interventions in a given place, and modify and adapt to external influences in accordance to norms, conventions and practices prevalent in the local society. Both internal and external factors are historically and geographically specific. Consequently, it is necessary to understand the relationship between gender and place to realize change. (Lund 1993: 197)

Lund's perspective highlights the need for indigenous women to renegotiate continuously local values in the light of broad structural economic and social transformations. Her poststructural feminism is pragmatically grounded in the realities

Renegotiating Local Values:

Alternative Development Cathrine Brun, Piers Blaikie, 2016-03-23 This book brings together a collection of essays that discuss alternative development and its relevance for local global processes of marginalization and change in the Global South Alternative development questions who the producers of development knowledges and practices are and aims at decentring development and geographical knowledge from the Anglo American centre and the Global North It involves resistance to dominant political economic processes in order to further the possibilities for non exploitative and just forms of development By discussing how to unravel marginalization and voice change through alternative methods actors and concepts the book provides useful guidance on understanding the relationship between theory and practice The main strength of the book is that it calls for a central role for alternative development in the current development discourse most notably related to justice rights globalization forced migration conflict and climate change The book provides new ways of engaging with alternative development thinking and making development alternatives relevant

Culture Wars and Local Politics Elaine B. Sharp, 1999 This collection offers alternative explanations of local actions with a focus on conflict It features examples of experiences selected from various cities It examines how the responses of local governments to specific issues are influenced by such factors as political culture and institutions

Masculinity, Power and Technology Ulf Mellström, 2003 Drawing on fieldwork carried out among male motor mechanics in the Chinese diaspora of Penang Malaysia this informative volume explores the links between technology and the masculinization of power Malaysia shares an obsession with modernity by way of technological development and a can do entrepreneurial spirit where technology is held in high esteem Technology holds such positive connotations in Malaysian society that it is therefore a source of individual and national empowerment Technology and modernity are therefore important factors when understanding contemporary Malaysian society Just as there is very much a masculine ethos pervading Malaysia's spirit and belief in modernity and progress this insightful and rewarding book focuses on technology and machines in relation to masculinity to provide an innovative anthropological perspective of Malaysian society and the Chinese diaspora

Assembling Women Teri L. Caraway, 2007 Despite the massive influx of women into the labor force as a result of globalization the gender inequalities at work have remained largely unchanged This book addresses two related questions What has prompted the feminization of manufacturing work in developing countries and why has it failed to significantly erode gender inequalities at work Teri L Caraway offers case studies and in depth analysis of employment changes in Indonesia combined with cross national data to show that the feminization of the workplace produced by industrialization policies has reconfigured and reproduced rather than overturned gender divisions of labor at work Caraway challenges the conventional wisdom that export oriented industrialization and women's cheap labor are the driving forces behind feminization Instead she argues the answers can be found in weak unions and current social practice Caraway employs information about a wide range of industries capital intensive male dominated non export firms as well as female dominated labor intensive export oriented industries in arriving at her conclusions Her findings will prove discouraging to anyone who hopes that globalization has become a positive force in improving the lives of women workers Caraway s multilevel methodology for analyzing changes in gendered patterns of employment and her introduction of gendered discourses of work as a major explanatory variable will make Assembling Women a valuable resource for women s studies scholars development economists political scientists and sociologists as well as all with an interest in Southeast Asian Studies and labor and industrial relations

The Power of Ideas Claudia Derichs, Thomas Heberer, 2006 This book brings a new approach to the study of political change in East and Southeast Asia and demonstrate the importance of political ideas behind policies and politics The traditional approach to studying the politics of a region is to focus on events personalities issues the mechanics of the political process What this volume looks to do is to step back and examine ideas and visions as well as those who articulate them and or put them into operation The contributors thus aim to conceptualize what discourse means for political change in East and Southeast Asia and how ideas in discourses affect political practice As well as theorizing on the roles of intellectuals ideas and discourses for processes of democratization reform and change the chapters also offer deep insights into the national and local the general and the specific situation of the selected countries

Reconfiguring Families in Contemporary Vietnam Magali Barbieri, Danièle Bélanger, 2009-03-18 Reconfiguring Families in Contemporary Vietnam chronicles and analyzes the most significant change for families in Vietnam s recent past the transition to a market economy referred to as Doi Moi in Vietnamese and generally translated as the renovation Two decades have passed since the wide ranging institutional transformations that took place reconfigured the ways families produce and reproduce The downsizing of the socialist welfare system and the return of the household as the unit of production and consumption redefined the boundaries between the public and private This volume is the first to offer a multidisciplinary perspective that sets its gaze exclusively on processes at work in the everyday lives of families and on the implications for gender and intergenerational relations By focusing on families this book shifts the spotlight from macro transformations of the renovation era orchestrated by those in power to micro level transformations experienced daily in households between husbands and wives parents and children grandparents and other family members
