Make Beliefs For Kids:

Make Beliefs for Kids of All Ages Bill Zimmerman, Tom Bloom, 1996-05-01 Clever drawings and compelling questions encourage youngsters to imagine create and explore new possibilities and to make new choices by writing drawing and coloring their responses Original Religion as Make-Believe Neil Van Leeuwen, 2023-11-21 To understand the nature of religious belief we must look at how our minds process the world of imagination and make believe We often assume that religious beliefs are no different in kind from ordinary factual beliefs that believing in the existence of God or of supernatural entities that hear our prayers is akin to believing that May comes before June Neil Van Leeuwen shows that in fact these two forms of belief are strikingly different Our brains do not process religious beliefs like they do beliefs concerning mundane reality instead empirical findings show that religious beliefs function like the imaginings that guide make believe play Van Leeuwen argues that religious belief which he terms religious credence is best understood as a form of imagination that people use to define the identity of their group and express the values they hold sacred When a person pretends they navigate the world by consulting two maps the first represents mundane reality and the second superimposes the features of the imagined world atop the first Drawing on psychological linguistic and anthropological evidence Van Leeuwen posits that religious communities operate in much the same way consulting a factual belief map that represents ordinary objects and events and a religious credence map that accords these objects and events imagined sacred and supernatural significance It is hardly controversial to suggest that religion has a social function but Religion as Make Believe breaks new ground by theorizing the underlying cognitive mechanisms Once we recognize that our minds process factual and religious beliefs in fundamentally different ways we can gain deeper understanding of the complex individual and group psychology of religious faith
