Functional and Territorial Interest Representation in the EU Michèle Knodt,Christine Quittkat,Justin Greenwood,2014-07-16 Despite a substantial legacy of literature on EU interest representation there is no systematic analysis available on whether a European model of interest representation in EU governance is detectable across functional and territorial categories of actors Functional actors include associations for business interests the professions and trade unions as well as NGOs and social movements territorial based entities include public actors such as regional and local government as well as actors primarily organised at territorial level What are the similarities and differences between territorial and functional based entities and are the similarities greater than the differences Are the differences sufficient to justify the use of different analytical tools Are the differences within these categories more significant than those across them Is there a professionalised European lobbying class across all actor types Does national embeddedness make a difference Which factors explain the success of actors to participate in European governance This book was originally published as special issue of Journal of European Integration

Lobbying in the new Europe Klemens

Joos,2011-05-06 The Treaty of Lisbon came into effect on 1 December 2009 It gives the EU a new primary law framework and has significantly enhanced its competence and importance thereby causing a remarkable increase in the EU s influence Certain changes in the voting procedures should be particularly significant for companies alongside the double majority rule in Council decisions under the Lisbon Treaty only a majority is now required in many areas previously governed by the principle of unanimity Foremost examples here are justice and internal affairs foreign trade and agriculture Persuading its own national government that its concerns are legitimate is therefore only of limited benefit to a company as individual Member States can easily be outvoted in Brussels A strong position in the company s home Member State only can rapidly become an insignificant minority position Nevertheless European actions and procedures remain obscure and inaccessible for many company heads Companies for this reason often fail to see many opportunities and chances which a deeper understanding of and a strong presence in the European capital can offer a business It is not simply the underlying conditions for companies in one Member State which are at stake but rather the conditions governing an internal market with around 500 million consumers The need for effective and efficient lobbying has increased due to the recent renaissance of the State observed in the crisis in the context of partial nationalisation far reaching regulation of entire sectors and a general increase in state control of company decisions good channels of communication to legislative and executive decision makers are more important than ever The publication helps to guide companies through the intricacies of Brussels and offers an insight into the complex but diverse and interesting service of lobbying It is designed as a practical tool especially for decision makers and executives in companies Numerous figures and tables illustrate the text Main topics include the characteristics of lobbying at the European level taking account of the changes brought about by the Treaty of Lisbon the notion of a lobbyist s practical tools and finally suggestions for a company s strategic positioning vis a vis decision makers in the European legislature and executive

Are the Council of Ministers and the Commission partners or rivals in European policy-making? Julia Heise,2005-04-02 Essay from the year 2004 in the subject Politics Topic European Union grade 1 5 University of Edinburgh language English abstract The European Union EU is a hybrid and unique body which does not fit with many of our preconceived notions of how politics is organized Cini 2003 a 1 Two aspects contribute to its distinctiveness First the EU has a two level nature it combines supranational with intergovernmental features Supranationalism is defined as the existence of an authority that is higher than that of the nation state and capable of imposing its will upon it Heywood 2000 259 Applied to the EU this definition would only concern the supranational EU institutions But supranationalism also refers to the common interests of the Union as a whole and to most policy areas which are under the authority of the EU The intergovernmental EU level is characterised by the dominance of state sovereignty It relates to some EU policy areas and particularly to the special role of the 25 EU member states which have considerable influence within the Union Both EU levels have been subject to two different EU integration theories Neo functionalism explains the creation and importance of a supranational stage with its core concept of spillover Intergovernmentalism is characterized by its state centrism and focus on sovereignty The second unique aspect of the EU related to the first is the complex EU policy making process Legislation developed by the EU institutions has to be implemented on a national level Particularly the European Commission and the Council of the EU are main actors in policy making In this process the Commission explicitly represents the Union s interests and is thus referred to as supranational The Council shows strong intergovernmental characteristics It acts on behalf of the sovereign EU member states and therefore has considerable influence in policy making

EU Committees as Influential Policymakers M. P. C. M. van Schendelen,1998 The book addresses the question of how and where EU decisions are taken There are about 1000 decisions each year The Commission s legislative programme is limited 16 proposals in 1997 31 in 1998 therefore the great majority are taken elsewhere mainly in committees Business is becoming increasingly aware of the role and influence of committees but increasingly frustrated because they are so secretive Committees do not publish their membership agendas or minutes This research will aim to shed some light on the process
