

EVALUATE

Evaluation will help you:

- Learn whether your activities are producing the desired results or change you are seeking to accomplish;
- Gain new insights into how you can improve your programs and increase your impact;
- Demonstrate to funders and donors that your work is making a difference;
- Give you data that can serve as a foundation for your next strategic plan.

(There is a great deal to learn about Evaluation, and many nonprofits find it daunting. Until another Toolkit focused on this topic is developed, this section touches on a few key points – particularly how evaluation relates to your Strategic Plan.)

Strategic Planners know at the EVALUATE stage that:

1. Evaluation is really just a plan to track your progress. It can be complicated and expensive, but every nonprofit can engage in simple evaluation activities. Seeking feedback from clients periodically and tracking a few key data points related to outputs and outcomes are common first steps.
2. As community stewards, the Board has responsibility to ensure that the organization is making a difference. Evaluation is the pathway to determine what results you are achieving. It can help you reflect on your successes and avoid repeating your failures. As board members, you want to hold the organization accountable to achieve results on behalf of the community.
3. Your Strategic Plan can be your first evaluation project. The board can monitor progress toward plan outcomes. A simple monitoring plan can be outlined in the plan itself. Some boards set up a dashboard to track key data points.
4. Measuring your work and finding indicators to track progress will help you tell your story to current and potential supporters. In today's competitive funding environment, it is valuable to have data that supports your program strategy. You may also want to articulate your "theory of change" or develop a logic model to help you explain your approach to others inside and outside the organization.
