

Suddenly the Royal Musicians would appear behind the Palace Gates and even the youngest child there would know that soon they would be playing the Queen March Tune. There were no words to this tune but it was lively and jazzy, with trumpets and clarinets and banjos, and no one with ears on each side of their head could hear it without wanting to dance.

The Royal Musicians would shout one, two, three, four! and then swing into the music, the whole crowd would start to hop and boogie, babies would bounce up and down in their prams and such a wonderful time would be had by one and all that, by the time Queen March danced on to the balcony and plumped herself down on the red velvet chair, the joint was jumping!
