

Now, carefully examine the author's second reason. What assumption is being made? To prove that medical marijuana is desirable, she appeals to questionable authorities—a California association. A position is not good just because the authorities are for it. What is important in determining the relevance of such reasoning is the evidence that the authorities are using in making their judgment. Unless we know that these authorities have special knowledge about this issue, we must treat this reason as a fallacy. Such a fallacy is called the appeal to questionable authority fallacy.

Fallacy: Appeal to Questionable Authority: Supporting a conclusion by citing an authority who lacks special expertise on the issue at hand.

---

Now let's examine some arguments related to another controversy: Should Congress approve a federally funded child development program that would provide day-care centers for children?

Exercise B

I am against the government's child development program. First, I am interested in protecting the children of this country. They need to be protected from social planners and self-righteous ideologues who would disrupt the normal course of children's lives and tear them from their mothers and families to make them pawns in a universal scheme designed to produce infinite happiness in 20 years. Children should grow up with their mothers, not with a series of caretakers and nurses' aides. What is at issue is whether parents shall continue to have the right to form the characters of their children, or whether the state with all its power should be given the tools and techniques for forming the young.

Let's again begin by outlining the argument.

CONCLUSION: The government's child development program is a mistake.

- REASONS:
1. Our children need to be protected from social planners and self-righteous ideologues, who would disrupt the normal course of children's lives and tear them from their families.
  2. The parents, not the state, should have the right to form the characters of their children.

As critical thinkers, we should be looking for specific facts about the program. But we find none. The reason is saturated with undefined and emotionally loaded generalities. Such terms will typically generate negative emotions that the writer or speaker hopes readers and listeners will associate with the position she is attacking.
