Operational Efficiency in Forestry C.R. Silversides, B. Sundberg, 2013-03-14 It is our conviction that professional skill in forestry will develop more readily and more efficiently if forestry students are presented with a clear understanding of the impact of the physical factors that both enhance and inhibit forestry activities Part I is analytic written as a basic text for undergraduates in courses such as logging transport forest engineering and even forest management It deals with the fundamentals of technology in forestry as determined by the physical environment The analytic approach serves two purposes to bring about a clear understanding of the real world of the forest and to develop tools through which efficiency and productivity can be explored understood and improved The principal author of this volume was Prof Ulf Sundberg Part II discusses in some detail a wide variety of practical problems encountered by foresters It describes harvesting systems and the principles of management and control of forest operations The influence of the forest on operations is described at length the terrain topography forest soils as well as the engineering characteristics of trees and forest stands It also considers the impact of operations on the forest The principal author of this volume was Dr Ross Silversides Chapters 11 12 and 13 were written by Prof Sundberg

Operational Efficiency in Forestry B. Sundberg, C.R. Silversides, 2013-03-14 It is our conviction based on many years of teaching and practical experience that professional skill in forestry will develop more readily and more efficiently if forestry students are presented with a clear understanding at an early stage of the impact of the physical factors that both enhance and inhibit forestry activities This knowledge is best acquired by addressing the physical world of forestry with a set of analytical tools through which an almost infinite number of variables can be listed in order to be measured and their interaction explored and resolved This is the main purpose of this joint effort presented in two volumes Part I and Part II Part I is analytic written as a basic text for undergraduates in courses such as logging transport forest engineering and even forest management It deals with the fundamentals of technology in forestry as determined by the physical environment Briefly it can be visualized as the application of forestry within the parameters space time and energy Forestry is a process with a long time horizon Free solar energy creates biomass which with the aid of other forms of energy is converted into products and services A knowledge of the dependencies and interactions is indispensable for the forestry profession The analytic approach serves two purposes to bring about a clear understanding of the real world of forest and to develop tools through which efficiency and productivity can be explored and improved

Section 32, Operational Efficiency,1958 Proceedings of the Meeting of the Section 32: Operational Efficiency in Stockholm, 30 August - 3 September, 1958 International Union of Forestry Research Organizations. Section 32,1958 The Use of Remote Sensing in the Modeling of Forest Productivity H.L. Gholz,Kaneyuki Nakane,H. Shimoda,2012-12-06 Forests comprise the greatest storage of carbon on land provide fuel for millions are the habitat for most terrestrial biodiversity and are critical to the economies of many countries Yet changes in the extent and dynamics of forests are inherently difficult to detect and quantify Remote sensing technologies may facilitate the measurement of some key forest properties which when combined with other information contained in various computer models may allow for the quantification of critical forest functions This book explores how remote sensing and computer modeling can be combined to estimate changes in the carbon storage or productivity of forests from the level of the leaf to the level of the globe Land managers researchers policy makers and students will all find stimulating discussions among an international set of experts at the cutting edge of the interface between science technology and management Operational Efficiency, Work Study and Ergonomics in Forestry ,1985

Forest site and productivity B. Gessel,2011-10-13 A knowledge of forest site and forest productivity variables is fundamental to sound forest practice everywhere The ability to identify sites and site problems correctly and manipulate productivity variables for maintenance or improvement of productivity is the basis of modern forest management Although the basic facts regarding forest site and productivity apply throughout the world the application of information and the response to manipulation vary greatly and depend on local forest conditions The September 1981 World Congress of the International Union of Forest Research Organizations IUFRO in Kyoto Japan was the occasion for the special meeting on Forest Site and Productivity sponsored by the IUFRO Site Group Sl 02 This meeting brought together forest site and productivity researchers from across the world to review current thought and the state of site research Information not ordinarily available in one place was presented at this meeting As organizer of the session I decided to attempt to publish the papers in one volume Arrangements were made with a publisher Martinus Nijhoff and also with the authors The process of publication has taken longer than desirable but the volume does appear at an opportune time coincident with the 1986 IUFRO World Congress in Yugoslavia Material contained in this publication will set the stage for Site Group discussions at the 1986 meeting This volume assembles the thought of forest research workers from many different countries and therefore many different kinds of forests
