G. Wells,2015-04-24 THE THEORY OF THE PERPETUAL DISCOMFORT OF HUMANITY Select Conversations With an Uncle H. G. Wells,2017-03-16 The fashionable and vulgar are after all but the expression of man s gregarious instinct Every poor mortal is torn by the conflicting dreads of being common place and of being eccentric He and more particularly she is continually imitating and avoiding imitation trying to be singular and yet like other people In the exquisitely fashionable and in the entirely vulgar the sheep like longing is triumphant and the revolting individual has disappeared The former is a mechanical vehicle upon which the new correct thing rides forth to extort the astonishment of men the latter a lifeless bier bearing its corrupt and unrecognisable remains away to final oblivion amidst universal execration It is curious to notice

George that there has of late been a fashion in originality
