Sense Of Direction:

Intuition, Theory, and Anti-theory in Ethics Sophie Grace Chappell, 2015 What form or forms might ethical knowledge take In particular can ethical knowledge take the form either of moral theory or of moral intuition If it can should it A team of experts explore these central questions for ethics and present a diverse range of perspectives on the discussion

Memory in the Real World Gillian Cohen, 1996 This fully revised and updated third edition of the highly acclaimed Memory in the Real World includes recent research in all areas of everyday memory Distinguished researchers have contributed new and updated material in their own areas of expertise The controversy about the value of naturalistic research as opposed to traditional laboratory methods is outlined and the two approaches are seen to have converged and become complementary rather than antagonistic The editors bring together studies on many different topics such as memory for plans and actions for names and faces for routes and maps life experiences and flashbulb memory and eyewitness memory Emphasis is also given to the role of memory in consciousness and metacognition New topics covered in this edition include life span development of memory collaborative remembering déjà vu and memory dysfunction in the real world Memory in the Real World will be of continuing appeal to students and researchers in the area

Why People Get Lost Paul A. Dudchenko, 2010 At some point in our lives most of us have been lost How does this happen What are the limits of our ability to find our way Do we have an innate sense of direction How people get lost reviews the psychology and neuroscience of navigation It starts with a history of studies looking at how organisms solve mazes It then reviews contemporary studies of spatial cognition and the wayfinding abilities of adults and children It then considers how specific parts of the brain provide a cognitive map and a neural compass This book also considers the neurology of spatial disorientation and the tendency of patients with Alzheimer's disease to lose their way Within the book the author proposes that we get lost because our brain's compass becomes misoriented This book is written for anyone with an interest in navigation and the brain It assumes no specialised knowledge of neuroscience but covers recent advances in our understanding of how the brain represents space

Processing of Visible Language Paul A. Kolars, 2013-11-21 The second symposium on processing visible language constituted a different mix of participants from the first Greater emphasis was given to the design of language both in its historical development and in its current display and to practical questions associated with machine implementation of language in the interactions of person and computer and in the characteristics of the physical and environmental objects that affect the interaction Another change was that a special session on theory capped the proceedings Psychologists remained heavily involved however both as contributors to and as discussants of the work presented The motivation of the conferences remains one of bringing together graphic designers engineers and psychologists concerned with the display and acquisition of visible language The papers separately tended to emphasize the one of the three disciplines that mark their authors field of endeavor but are constructed to be general rather than parochial Moreover within the three disciplines papers emphasized either the textual or the more pictorial aspects For example a session on writing systems ranged from principles that seem to characterize all such systems to specific papers on ancient Egyptian writing modern Korean and English shorthand The complementary session on the nontextual media opened with a discussion of general principles of pictorial communication and included papers on communicating instructions general information or religious belief through designs and other pictorial forms as well as a discussion of misrepresentation

Forest and Stream ,1926 Handbook of Behavioral and Cognitive Geography Daniel R. Montello,2018-04-27 This comprehensive Handbook summarizes existing work and presents new concepts and empirical results from leading scholars in the multidisciplinary field of behavioral and cognitive geography the study of the human mind and activity in and concerning space place and environment It provides the broadest and most inclusive coverage of the field so far including work relevant to human geography cartography and geographic information science

A Sense of Direction Laura Sena,1999-01-01 This state of the art program addresses directional confusion by targeting concepts such as left right forward backward and up down Children with learning or language disabilities learn body awareness and directional concepts relative first to themselves then to the environment and finally to others More than 40 lessons are developmentally sequenced in four levels from simple to advanced The book begins by teaching general body awareness as in Alligator where the child becomes aware of different body parts touching the floor as he moves The self becomes a reference point in Crumple where the blindfolded child identifies where she hears the paper crumbling around her right left in front etc The next level uses the environment as a reference point Students follow simple maps such as a prairie dog town mazes and floor grids made by creating squares with masking tape on the floor The last section uses others as reference points One activity has the child look at pictures of people in various poses identifying that person's left or right body parts
