

SEXUALITY EDUCATION

November 2014

Primary school learners in Northern Uganda defined quality CSE as:

- “Accurate and complete information
- In time before they experience situations
- Topics which are relevant to their lives
- Participatory and interactive, including role play and debates!”

“I want to learn about my health and how to avoid early pregnancy... it is good for us young people to learn ourselves very well”

- Primary 6 learner, Northern Uganda

Sexuality Education

When young people are equipped with accurate and contextually relevant information, skills, access to services and support related to their sexuality, they are better able to:

- ✓ Make healthy decisions now and in the future;
- ✓ Avoid unintended pregnancies and unsafe abortions;
- ✓ Protect themselves against harassment & abuse, and STIs, including HIV.

UNESCO's International Technical Guidance on Sexuality Education guides age-appropriate, culturally relevant and scientifically accurate sexuality education, with structured opportunities to explore attitudes and values, and to practice the decision-making and other life skills to make informed choices.

Our Approaches

Very young adolescents (VYA)

Given primary school enrolment rates, and the growing body of evidence of the importance of the 10-14 year old period to establish life-long body pride and health, Save the Children invests in primary school CSE, develops context-specific and links VYA to protective services.

Adolescent –centered

Save the Children takes a positive, adolescent-centered approach to sexuality education to ensure their voices are heard and their needs are addressed through accurate information, skill building, protection and support.

Innovate on forming gender norms

We work to form age-appropriate pro-social gendered attitudes and behaviors. This is done through separate curricula as well as supplemental lessons and activities integrated into curricula for adolescents – as well as parents and communities.

Ecological model

Our programs are designed to affect change through an ecological model – with the individual adolescent, in their relationships with others, at family school and community levels, and at the policy level. We also work to actively link young people to health services.

Partnerships designed to scale-up

For school-based delivery of sexuality education, we work in partnership with national and local education departments to institutionalize CSE based on evidence of what works.

Save the Children International Zambia/ Agnes Zaita

Components of our sexuality education curricula as detailed in the International Technical Guidance on Sexuality Education, UNESCO, 2009
