

Passive and Low Energy Architecture in Education of Contemporary Architecture

Barbara WIDERA

Faculty of Architecture, Wrocław University of Technology, Wrocław, Poland

ABSTRACT: At the beginning of XXI century climatic and sustainable design has been the most actual topic of contemporary architecture. Education of young architects in this area of knowledge should become as advanced as possible. Showing clearly that passive and low energy architecture is not a temporary fashion but the new way of thinking and does not have to be connected with any particular current should become one of the most important goals for the educators. The rich and original exemplification is very important in the teaching process. It helps student understand how sustainable design works in practice. In consequence they are more open for new challenges and creative solutions. Theory and practical experience should be connected in the whole education process. International cooperation, conferences, workshops and practices as well as students contests are highly recommended so that the good examples can be followed and the young generation of architects will promote the worldwide campaign for passive and low energy architecture of the future.

Keywords: education, architecture, energy, bioclimatic, sustainable

1. INTRODUCTION

At the beginning of XXI century climatic and sustainable design has been the most actual topic of contemporary architecture. Education of young architects in this area of knowledge should become as advanced as possible. Nevertheless teaching practice seems to stay behind the science and technology. Certain efforts to change this fact have been undertaken. It is vital to diversify the educational process and to follow the theoretical knowledge with practical works. It is also essential to raise students' consciousness that the architecture safe for the environment has been an unavoidable need of our times on one hand, but on the other hand does not result with any limitation of individual style nor creativeness of the author.

2. THE NEW APPROACH TO ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN

2.1. Common Philosophy. Any Style is Welcome

XXI century should start with the radical change of typical but old fashioned approach presented in the polemic between Peter Eisenman and Leon Krier "My ideology is better than yours" (Eisenman, Krier 1989) [1]. Many designers believe that climatic architecture has been a part of Eco-Tech movement which they regard to be nothing but the evolution of High-Tech logic. For the opponents that kind of design does not leave enough space for the creativeness, imagination and personal style of the designer. Showing clearly that passive and low energy architecture does not have to be connected with any particular current should become one of the most important goals for the educators.

Villa A (Fig. 1), located on the slope of the Poesting Berg, a mountain in Linz, Austria, designed by Najjar & Najjar Architects (2010), represents the example of low energy building. On the southern and western side of the house the roof cantilevers beyond the terraces to provide an efficient sun protection in the summer while in the winter the low sun angle allows controlled entry of the natural light into the interior space.
