Ward,1902      The Sorceress (Complete) Margaret Oliphant Wilson Oliphant,2020-09-28 Imagine to yourselves such a young family all in the very heyday of life parents and children alike It is true that Mrs Kingsward was something of an invalid but nobody believed that her illness was anything very serious only a reason why she should be taken abroad to one place after another to the great enjoyment of the girls who were never so happy as when they were travelling and gaining as they said experience of life She was not yet forty while Charlie was twenty one and Bee nineteen so that virtually they were all of the same age so to speak and enjoyed everything together mamma by no means put aside into the ranks of the dowagers but going everywhere and doing everything just like the rest and as much admired as anyone To be sure she had not been able to walk about so much this time and had not danced once except a single turn with Charlie which brought on a palpitation so that she declared with a laugh that her dancing days were over Her dancing days over Considering how fond she had always been of dancing the three young people laughed over this and did not take the least alarm Mamma had always been the ringleader in everything even in the romps with the little ones at home For you must not think that these three were all of the family by any means Bee and Betty were the eldest of I can t at this moment tell how many who were safe in the big nursery at Kingswarden under the charge very partial of papa and the strict and steady rule of nurse who was a personage of high authority in the house Papa had but lately left the elder ones as he called them including his pretty wife and had gone back to his work which was that of an official at the Horse Guards in some military department of which I don t even know the name for I doubt whether the Intelligence Department which satisfies all the necessities of description had been invented in those days Colonel Kingsward was a distinguished officer and the occasion of great clat to the little group when he showed himself at their head drawing round him a sort of cloud of foreign officers wherever he went which Bee and Betty appreciated largely and to which Mrs Kingsward herself did not object for they all liked the clank of spurs as was natural and the endless ranks of partners attendants in the gardens and general escort and retinue thus provided It was not however among these officers red blue green and white of all the colours in the rainbow that Bee had found her fate For I need scarcely say it was a proposal which had turned everything upside down and filled the little party with excitement
