Oil Arab Regional Development:

Oil and Arab Regional Development Kamal S. Sayegh, 1978-10-17 This book deals with the two aspects of the oil industry the Arab oil industry as a unit and its future The Development Century Stephen J. Macekura, Erez Manela, 2018-09-06 Offers cutting edge perspectives on how international development has shaped the global history of the modern world Oil and the Arab region development Kamal Saliba Sayigh, 1967 International Division of Labour and Regional Development Rameshwar Prasad Misra, 1989 The Kuwait Fund and the Political Economy of Arab Regional Development Soliman Demir, 1976 Africa Army Library (U.S.), 1973 Africa: a Bibliographic Survey of Literature Army Library (U.S.), 1974 International Migration and Development in the Arab Region United Nations. Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, 2008-01-29 International migration is a steadily expanding international phenomenon of long standing which impacts on global economies and the political and economic relations between sending and receiving countries One of the most important indicators of the dynamism and complexity of international migration is perhaps the fact that it is directly rapidly and instantly affected by the challenges of globalization at the Arab regional and international levels The first section of this report considers the trends and patterns of Arab migration Since the 1970s Arab migration has continued to change not only with respect to size but also as regards composition the qualifications of migrants the countries they target and the repercussions of migration in receiving and sending countries For decades the Arab labour market was instrumented in balancing the needs of countries with excess labour high demographic rates and scarce resources and those countries with an economic surplus low demographic rates and a scarcity of labour This relates specifically to non oil Arab countries versus oil countries The second section of the report address international migration and its relevance top development in Arab countries Regional Financial Cooperation Jose Antonio Ocampo, 2007-08-29 A Brookings Institution Press and Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean ECLAC publication Using the experience of postwar Western Europe as a benchmark Jos Antonio Ocampo and his colleagues assess how regional financial institutions can help developing countries often at a disadvantage within the global financial framework finance their investment needs counteract the volatility of private capital flows and make their voices heard The 1997 Asian financial crisis generated extensive debate on the international financial architecture Through this discussion it became clear that services by financial institutions including adequate mechanisms for preventing and managing financial crises and instruments for safeguarding global macroeconomic and financial stability are undersupplied Furthermore private international capital markets provide finance to developing countries in a way that effectively reduces the ability of those nations to undertake countercyclical macroeconomic policies International capital markets ration out many developing countries particularly the poorest from private global capital markets While these deficiencies in the financial architecture are clear the post 1997 debate has done little to evaluate the role that regional institutions could play in improving global financial arrangements
