California Public Records

Any "writing" filed with a government agency is a public record in California, and these writings may include agency minutes, emails, agendas, videos, and audio recordings. Though all public records are important as they provide transparency of government operations, we've concentrated on the California records that are kept in online databases and what you'll find here are the ones we feel are most useful to you in your daily life or to your business.

This page lists statewide California databases in alphabetical order. Click on "Popularity" to sort the list by number of visits. For county records, city records, license verification databases, or databases organized by category of record, use the menus in the left-hand column.

- Court System: The California court system has three levels. At the first level are the Superior Courts. In 2008, under Proposition 220, all California counties unified their superior and municipal courts. Former municipal courts are now called limited jurisdiction superior courts. Civil, felony, misdemeanor, DW/DUI, and juvenile cases are heard at the general superior courts, while felony preliminary hearings and smaller misdemeanors are heard at the limited superior courts. At the second level are the Courts of Appeal, which review decisions from the Superior Courts. At the top level is the California Supreme Court, which reviews decisions from all lower courts. - Criminal Records: Penal Code section 11105 makes it illegal to provide a full statewide criminal history to anyone outside of law enforcement, except to the person who is the subject of the report and authorized "Applicant Agencies" such as schools, in-home care providers, agencies that provide for the security and care of children, private patrol operators, etc. For available free databases, legal ways to search criminal records in California and information on how to order a search from the state on yourself or someone else, go to our California Criminal Records page.
