Old Men Remember:

Men's Stories for a Change Randy Barber, Vic Blake, Jeff Hearn, 2016-06 Men's Stories for a Change records and analyses stories written by a group of older men who met over thirteen years to share memories about ageing and masculinity. So here there are stories of love and sex, bodily change, crisis and disturbance, politics and power struggles with violent feelings and action, work, sport, clothes, peeing, hair and hairlessness. These men share a view of manhood, gender and ageing that while critical of dominant frames and inspired by feminist politics is optimistic without underestimating the challenges of older age and old age including the approach to the end of life. They see ageing as an opportunity for personal and social and indeed political change for dealing with longstanding issues especially around gender and power and as a time of innovating too. This project aims to help in some small way in opening up these issues, freeing up in a profeminist direction the voices of other men individually or collectively ageing or otherwise. The authors have all been involved in some kind of men's anti-sexist, profeminist politics and/or men's personal development work along with other personal and political activism in such arenas as anti-nuclear, anti-racism, green, left, socialist and peace politics over the years. Using the methods of memory work, the writers are both subjects and objects; the text cuts across that division too. Similarly, this volume can be located in various traditions, genres and forms of writing. This is a project that is both finished and unfinished.

Hexametrical Genres from Homer to Theocritus Christopher Athanasios Faraone, 2021-09-28 The book discusses short non-epic and underappreciated hexametrical genres such as oracles, incantations and laments and gains new insight into their ritual performance, their early history and how poets from Homer to Theocritus embedded or imitated these genres to enrich their own poems.
