

CHAPTER VII

TOWARDS UNDERSTANDING THE ROLE AND VALUE OF PATENTS IN A KNOWLEDGE-BASED ECONOMY

ZELJKO TEKIC, DRAGAN KUKOLJ,
MIROSLAVA DRAZIC, MILANA VITAS

Summary: Patent, as a form of intellectual property has existed for centuries with the underlying purpose of balancing between the interests of the inventor and those of the society and thus stimulating innovation, research and creativity. For a long time patents were mainly deployed for two fundamental strategic purposes – to sustain exclusion rights or in cross-licensing negotiations with competitors. However, with the entrance of non-producing patent dealers (e.g. Intellectual Ventures, Rambus, Rembrandt IP, Acacia Technologies) to the high technology market, the strategy of “being infringed” has emerged as the new stream in the strategic use of patents. Patent dealers have reached an exceptional growth rate in scale and scope of operations and today they significantly affect companies of all sizes in many industries, not only in the high technology sector. Moreover, the new strategy and new players changed the basic postulates in understanding the use and value of patents. This chapter is intended to review the role of patents in a knowledge-based economy and the various ways patents are used and valued today, to identify emerging trends and to outline the areas where further research is needed.
