- a. Citizens participate in voting.
- b. The executive power is separate from the legislature.

In presidential democracy, the president is separate from the legislature. Choice a is incorrect. Both in presidential and in parliamentary democracy, the people participate in voting. Choice c is incorrect. In parliamentary democracy, not presidential, the executive power, usually called the prime minister, is a member of parliament or the legislature. Choice d is incorrect. In parliamentary democracy, the parliament or legislature elects the president; this answer is incorrect because that is an attribute of parliamentary, not presidential, democracy.
