Reading Passage

Directions: Read the passage and answer the questions that follow.

Mendelian patterns of inheritance are based on the work of Gregor Mendel, an Austrian monk who conducted experiments with pea plants in the 1850s. Mendel discovered the basic principles of heredity and is considered the father of genetics. His work demonstrated that each trait is controlled by a single gene, which has two alleles. One allele is dominant and the other is recessive. The dominant allele masks the effect of the recessive allele.

The probability of offspring being tall from a cross between a tall parent and a short parent is 75%. This is because the tall parent is heterozygous (Tt) and the short parent is homozygous recessive (tt). The possible genotypes of the offspring are TT, Tt, Tt, and tt. The probability of the offspring being tall (TT or Tt) is 75%.

When a heterozygous tall parent (Tt) is crossed with a homozygous short parent (tt), the probability of the offspring being tall is 50%. This is because the tall parent can pass on either a dominant (T) or a recessive (t) allele, and the short parent can only pass on a recessive (t) allele. The possible genotypes of the offspring are Tt and tt. The probability of the offspring being tall (Tt) is 50%.

When a heterozygous tall parent (Tt) is crossed with another heterozygous tall parent (Tt), the probability of the offspring being tall is 75%. This is because both parents can pass on either a dominant (T) or a recessive (t) allele. The possible genotypes of the offspring are TT, Tt, Tt, and tt. The probability of the offspring being tall (TT or Tt) is 75%.

3. What is the probability of offspring being tall from a cross between a tall parent and a short parent?
