On Assignment:

On Assignment James R. Larison, 2021-11-02 Jim and Elaine Larison spent years studying exploring and living in wild places making more than thirty environmental films most for the National Geographic Society These films won more than forty international awards from leading environmental and broadcast organizations This memoir tells the story behind the adventure and describes the rather substantial personal costs of this career While shooting film in Alaska Jim Larison narrowly survived a devastating airplane crash in the Bering Sea Later while filming on the Great Barrier Reef the Larisons fought off an aggressive twelve foot tiger shark Midway through their careers the Larisons were nearly swept to their deaths by an icefall while filming on Mount Robson A thrilling adventure story full of risk and personal conflict On Assignment is also a touching look at the tender bonds that held the married couple together while they struggled to complete their many film assignments The Larisons were changed by what they saw and what they captured on film the destruction of forests the death of coral reefs and global warming In the beginning the Larisons wanted nothing more than to spend time in the wilderness By the end they were fighting for its very survival
