Making The City Observable:

Making the City Observable Richard Saul Wurman, 1971 This publication is a catalogue of various means of urban communication that the author hopes to see evolve and spread in the development of materials about the city and in the articulation of physical aspects of the city itself The inner connection of the seemingly miscellaneous items manifested here is made immediately apparent to the reader This special issue of the journal Design Quarterly is a catalogue of projects ideas books guides maps advertisements curricula teaching aids place signs route symbols models graphs and other items that make it easier to understand and to imagine the environment A catalogue is meant to give provocative hints of ideas and items available This catalogue attempts through the juxtaposition of some 80 projects all of them pictured to outline a syllabus for urban communication Making the city observable Wurman observes means making the plethora of public information public Information and communication are components of learning and giving the city visibility implies allowing the city to become an environment for learning The city can be made observable by developing a school curriculum about our man made environment or by designing a clear subway map or by writing the propositions on a ballot so that nonlawyers can understand them or by any number of other possibilities illustrated in this volume The following partial list of items is meant only to indicate the range of the catalogue Peltier s birds eye view of Paris Wurman s 60 comparative city models Eames film on urban communications Fetter s computer graphics the AIA Guide to New York City Michelin s Green Guides Pan Am s taped tours Halprin s RSVP Cycles Lynch s Image of the City Wyman s Mexico City metro graphics the London underground map Psychology Today s city survey maps for the blind Philadelphia s school without walls Kahn s movement notation and displays from the Laboratory of Computer Graphics and Spatial Analysis Richard Saul Wurman ,1971 Architectural Intelligence Molly Wright Steenson, 2022-11-01 Architects who engaged with cybernetics artificial intelligence and other technologies poured the foundation for digital interactivity In Architectural Intelligence Molly Wright Steenson explores the work of four architects in the 1960s and 1970s who incorporated elements of interactivity into their work Christopher Alexander Richard Saul Wurman Cedric Price and Nicholas Negroponte and the MIT Architecture Machine Group all incorporated technologies including cybernetics and artificial intelligence into their work and influenced digital design practices from the late 1980s to the present day Alexander long before his famous 1977 book A Pattern Language used computation and structure to visualize design problems Wurman popularized the notion of information architecture Price designed some of the first intelligent buildings and Negroponte experimented with the ways people experience artificial intelligence even at architectural scale Steenson investigates how these architects pushed the boundaries of architecture and how their technological experiments pushed the boundaries of technology What did computational cybernetic and artificial intelligence researchers have to gain by engaging with architects and architectural problems And what was this new space that emerged within these collaborations At times Steenson writes the architects in this book characterized themselves as anti architects and their work as anti architecture The projects Steenson examines mostly did not result in constructed buildings but rather in design processes and tools computer programs interfaces digital environments Alexander Wurman Price and Negroponte laid the foundation for many of our contemporary interactive practices from information architecture to interaction design from machine learning to smart cities World Cities and the Future of the Metropolises Luigi Mazza, Georges Teysot, 1988 The Role of Time Function in City Spatial Structures Miloš Bobić, 1990 Power in the City Marion Orr, Valerie C.
