consequences of the spatial patterns have received surprisingly little systematic attention. Often migration is seen just from a host country perspective or from a sending country perspective without explicit consideration of the sub-national origin and destinations of the flows or linkages between countries. It is well known that migration flows follow certain gravity-like properties: that there is chain migration; that certain regions attract more migrants than others; that migrants are highly urbanised; and that within urban areas there are also concentrations of migrants leading to a reshaping of the urban landscape. However, such observations are often the result of purely descriptive research or case study research. Consequently, there is still a need for an integrated multi-disciplinary study of the spatial impact and the resulting socio-economic and political issues concerning migration. This book aims to fill this gap by bringing together a collection of papers which are primarily concerned with the spatial impact of contemporary international migration patterns or with related issues. The topics of the papers are wide-ranging and the focus varies from broad international perspectives to specific urban areas. Two general themes run through the papers. The first of these is that migration is an inherently dynamic process which may have either equilibrating or self-reinforcing cumulative effects. The importance of considering international migration in a dynamic context has come to the fore in several theoretical frameworks which are available in the literature to study this phenomenon. The second major theme of the book is the emphasis on the importance of personal networks in shaping international migration patterns leading to pronounced clusters of urban areas from which migrants are drawn and of migrant settlement.

Japanese Brazilians in Japan Hitomi Maeda, 2007. This book provides an overview of recent immigrant phenomenon in Japan and explains the complexity of the community integration of Japanese-Brazilian offsprings whose ancestors immigrated to Brazil about 100 years ago. Japan is a relatively homogeneous society so that it is a great challenge for Japanese people to see differences and understand what really diversity or globalization mean. Through the research life experiences and identity issues of Nikkei Brazilians, community integration and factors that explain the degree of social integration of Nikkei Brazilians are explored based on the triangulated results from both quantitative and qualitative data. This study makes six basic contributions that are: 1) to reveal the perceptions of Nikkei Brazilians toward Japanese and vice versa; 2) to ascertain the major barriers influencing integration; 3) to empirically test and question several key hypotheses of previous literature; 4) to determine the special characteristics of this ethnic group in Japan; 5) to explore the possibility of developing a new theory going beyond conventional theories of assimilation, separation, marginalization, and integration; and 6) to develop a formula for assessing the degree of social integration: SI index based on an exploratory factor analysis.

Dominguez-Mujica, Jennifer McGarrigle, Juan Manuel Parreño-Castellano, 2021-10-04 This book assesses the drivers and impacts of new international residential mobilities by considering a range of mobilities in different countries across the globe from investment amenity and retirement mobilities to those of the new global middle class and the transnational elites It examines the intersection of these mobilities with the increase in the volume of global tourism the advent of the sharing economy and peer to peer platforms and the effects of transnational property investment The consequent transformations are considered in urban environments where tourism pressure coexists with gentrification increasing house prices and processes of social and ethnic segregation By offering a broad perspective based on different case studies the book portrays the contradictory consequences of international residential mobilities both favouring local opportunities for development and disrupting housing markets through the disassociation from local demand As a result this book is a great resource for academics and students in tourism urban and migration studies as well as policy makers and practitioners involved in urban planning social affairs and tourism management
