In brief

Millstein et al. present new estimates of the climate and air quality benefits for wind and solar generation that occurred in the United States from 2019 to 2022. The new approach leverages public data, allows for uncertainty quantification and annual updates, and can possibly be ported to other regions.

Highlights

- United States wind and solar power cut CO₂ emissions by 900 million metric tons from 2019–2022
- This wind and solar power cut SO₂ and NO_x emissions by 1 million metric tons
- These emission reductions provided $249 billion of climate and health benefits
- The average 2022 climate and health benefits were $143/MWh (wind) and $100/MWh (solar)
