Stigma and Culture J. Lorand Matory, 2015-12-02 Stigma and Culture by J Lorand Matory is a courageous auto ethnographic examination of the stigma attached to color The work is a major contribution to a new scholarly genre a form of anthropological theory building in memoir form Its varied gestures include paeans to past mentors rich recollections of childhood ethnographic analyses of various cultural institutions especially Howard University re conceptualizations of Caribbean African significances vis a vis African Americans in the United States and more Such a wide ranging effort is precisely what recommends this book and what makes it like few other books in Anthropology or Africana Studies Matory argues that several ironies highlight class based seemingly post racial social formations while also reinforcing racialization and challenging such racial logics from within He shows how educational institutions are spaces for the paradoxical production of both elitist post ethnic class identities and for the fostering of would be ethnic particularity and difference all at the same time Providing a nuanced window into variously situated Black groups in the United States including the seemingly exotic little races or tri racial isolates such as Louisiana Creoles and the oft discussed Gullah Geechee this book argues that the longstanding scholarly assumption about social isolation as a causal mechanism for the cultural legitimacy of such groups is absolutely wrong Instead Matory shows that all of these groups are quite decidedly produced in and through contact with their ostensible others Ethnic purities and particularities are the byproducts of anxieties and efforts birthed from the contact that such purities are meant to deny This is one of the book's most powerful interventions and Matory provides compelling arguments for how so many get this wrong Ultimately Stigma and Culture explains not just the continuing significance of race and ethnicity as seen in various American contexts but also makes the case for how new and old ethnic differences are enabled and produced in the contemporary moment
