

Letters of Evaluation-A Guide for the Author

When writing letters of evaluation for students applying for a graduate program in a health profession or medical school, the following information may be helpful to you. It will assist you in preparing a letter which will be most useful to the admissions committee. The information was obtained from medical school admissions committee members, but it is applicable to all health professions.

Please be sure your letter is signed, dated, and on letterhead - schools may reject it if any of these are missing.

As a reminder, letters of recommendation require a date, letterhead, and a signature.

MOST HELPFUL CONTENT

- 1. Relationship between the applicant and the evaluator, the extent of personal knowledge about the applicant and the ability to give specific examples and document evidence about behavior.
- 2. Information on personal characteristics of the applicant, including integrity, honesty, reliability, professionalism, determination, leadership, and motivation. Desirable information includes: examples or statements that reflect an applicant's character, service commitment, personal struggle; pointed remarks concerning the seriousness, aptitude, and integrity of the applicant; personal assessment as an individual with respect to humanity, responsibility and examples of those qualities.
- 3. Contrasted strengths and weaknesses of the applicant, including narrative comparisons of the applicant with other applicants and global numerical comparisons of applicants. Examples include: information about motivation/how the student ranks among others
- 4. Description of the applicant's social skills, including interpersonal skills, the ability to interact in groups and participate in class, and the ability to establish peer relationships.
