

Dear Professor Davidson,

I hope you don't mind my writing to you. I am working on a book on the depiction of cross-class relationships in women's fiction from India and Pakistan and one of the chapter deals with the literary portrayal of sexual encounters/relationships between upper-class men and their female domestic servants. I would like to begin the chapter by talking about the difficulty in defining and identifying "real consent" in unequal relationships, especially when the inequality stems from both patriarchy and class hierarchies. I believe you have discussed how inequality seriously complicates the notion of consent in your book "Prostitution, Power and Freedom".

I have scoured all the libraries and bookshops in Lahore but unfortunately have been unable to find a copy of your book. I have found references online to the arguments made in the book but was wondering if you would mind sharing the relevant section with me so that I may read your work firsthand? I would really appreciate your help.

Yours sincerely

Maryam Mirza
