

Lesson 8 Geologic Process and Hazards

Objectives:

At the end of the lesson, you should be able to:

1. Describe the various hazards that may happen in the event of earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and landslides
2. Using hazard maps, identify areas prone to hazards brought about by earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and landslides
3. Give practical ways of coping with geological hazards caused by earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and landslides
4. Identify human activities that speed up or trigger landslides
5. Suggest ways to help lessen the occurrence of landslides in your community

Previously, we talked about the different geologic processes that shape the exterior and interior of the planet—exogenic and endogenic processes. In this lesson, you will learn about different geologic processes that are worthy of study because of the impact they bring to human lives: earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, tsunamis, and landslides. Aside from the underlying science behind these processes, you will learn about the hazards they bring to human life as well as ways to prevent and cope with the destruction they may bring to you and your community.

Subject Matter

Hazards

You may have seen the symbols shown in Figure 8.1. Can you tell what each symbol means? These symbols are called hazards; and each symbol specifies a specific type of hazard. A hazard is any potential source of damage, harm, or adverse ill effects to health, property, livelihood, services, social and economic well-being, or to the environment. Moreover, a hazard may be broadly classified as man-made or natural, the definitions of which are self-explanatory. While the hazards covered in Earth and Life Science are classified under natural hazards, keep in mind that they can be aggravated by man-made activities.

Natural hazards are those hazards brought by natural phenomena such as earthquakes, storms, and volcanic activities. However, a natural phenomenon can only be regarded as a natural hazard if it is probable to take place in populated areas of human settlement. If a hazardous event yields an enormous number of casualties, injuries, or property damages, it is regarded as a natural disaster.
