WW2
FACT FILES

PETER CHAMBERLAIN and TERRY GANDER

The mortar bomb and its projector, the mortar, were widely used by all the combatant nations; the types used are described and illustrated. Many of the soldiers who participated in World War 2 will remember the efficiency of the various German mortars and these are all included. Also included are the Russian 12 cm mortars that so impressed the Germans that they copied them. The familiar British 2", 3", and 4.2" models and the Japanese and Italian versions are mentioned. So, too, are the crude but effective improvisations encountered in the Pacific campaigns.

World War 2 saw the re-emergence of the rocket as a weapon of war, not only as the forerunner of the modern space vehicles but also as a battlefield weapon. From 1940 onwards the rocket became the new large-area barrage and anti-aircraft weapon that combined low cost with hitting power, with the added bonus of a powerful anti-morale arrival noise. Included are the British 'Z' batteries, the numerous German Nebelwerfer, the Russian Katyuscha, and the various American and Japanese rockets.
